The "old toll house" near Hancock is located on the north side of Maryland Route 144 or old U.S. 40 about one mile west of town. It is situated at the edge of the road and faces south opposite the entrance of Fort Tonoloway State Park.

The structure is a three-bay, one-and-a-half story brick dwelling painted pink with white trim. The gable roof is covered with corrugated sheet metal which is not original. Two gable dormers are built into the south slope of the roof. They appear to have been added during the late 19th or early 20th century.

The foundations of the house are low and are of coursed local fieldstone. They carry walls of brick laid in common bond. There is no decorative brick work associated with the window or door openings.

The few windows are small in size relative to the wall area. In the front wall, there are two windows with four-over-four pane sashes. Similar windows are located in the side and rear walls. Two small four-light openings are present within the gable of each end of the structure. The framing of the windows is very plain with simple molding along the sashes.

Doors are located in the center bay of the front of the house and in the north bay of the east end wall. The doors like the windows are very plain and without decorative trim.

Small brick chimneys are located inside each gable end. The roof which extends for several inches beyond the end walls probably dates from the late 19th or early 20th century. It is finished with simple molding at the eaves.

A two-bay, shed roof end porch extends along the length of the east gable side of the house. It is supported by square wooden posts. A gable roof entrance covering is present over the front door. Until recent years, a porch extended along the entire length of the house where evidence of its supporting joists remain in the wall.

The toll house property contains 3.57 acres. The structure is in good condition, although altered, and is in no immediate danger of destruction. It would, however, be threatened if Route 144 were to be widened.

The significance of this structure lies in both its history and its architecture. It is one of the few remaining toll houses along the old National Road. The National Road was charted between Hancock and Cumberland in 1819 and completed in 1822, following an 18th century frontier trail. A deed dated March 29, 1820, from Thomas C. Brent to the President, Managers and Company of the Cumberland Turnpike records the purchase of 1/2 acre of land for $50 and refers to a "brick toll house lately erected within the boundaries above described." The 1/2 acre of land came from a tract called "Brent's Chance" which contained 406 acres originally surveyed to Thomas Brent on March 31, 1793. The deed evidence indicates that the toll house was built about the same time as the turnpike and therefore was used to collect tolls since the opening of the National Pike. Many residents of the Hancock area recall the toll house in operation earlier in this century.

Architecturally, the toll house provides a documented example of an early 19th century structure which had a combined use as a service building and as a residence. Unlike the present day turnpike toll booths, this structure was equipped to be a permanent dwelling for the toll keeper. Thus its appearance, while functional, also reflects its intended use as a place of residence.
